His proposals include consideration of a ban on new U.S. investment and loans in South Africa, and a prohibition on the import of South African gold Krugerrands and the export of U.S. computers to the white-run government.

Starting in September, there will be more time for verbs and less time for such neighborhood explorations, because France's education minister, Jean-Pierre Chevenement, has told schoolteachers to get back to basics and curb progressive

Some diplomats expressed concern that the withdrawal would suggest a weakening of Western support at a time when the government of Thailand is overcoming a reluctance to prosecute the pirates. .Most attacks on refugees fleeing Vietnam have been attributed to Thai fishermen.

The reported number both of pirate attacks and of victims, while still high, show signs of decreasing as a result of the tougher action by the Thais. From January to April This year 24 refugees were reported -murdered, another 20 were missing and feared drowned, and 35 were abducted. This was a decline from · 102 refugee deaths reported in the same period last year.

However, the pirate attacks over the last four months have been among the most brutal ever.

One refugee recently interviewed said that she had been the only survivor from a boat that had been carrying almost 100 Vietnamese. If confirmed, the officials said, the attack would be the worst reported since the Vietnamese began fleeing by boat in the mid-1970s.

Israeli Leader Asks Cabinet Not to Discuss Settlers' Trial

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM -- Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel called on cabinet ministers Thursday to end a fierce debate over whether the state should pardon Jewish settlers awaiting verdicts in their trial for attacks against Arab civilians on the West Bank Speaking on radio, Mr. Peres

The arguments erupted after Israel freed 1,150 prisoners — mostly Arabs - on Monday, including 79 who were responsible for the killings of Israelis, in exchange for three Israeli soldiers captured in Yitzhak Shamir, the foreign minister and Mr. Peres's chief political rival, has pressed the government to release the accused settlers but only after the verdicts are pro-nounced. Mr. Shamir is the head of the rightist Likud bloc, the major partner of Mr. Peres's Labor Party in the coalition government.

[In a closed meeting of the cabi-net Wednesday, Mr. Peres report-edly rejected a request from Mr. Shamir that he pardon the Jewish settlers, United Press International reported.] Commenting publicly for the first time on the issue, Mr. Peres

MOSCOW (NYT) — A Soviet civilian jetliner collided with a small military plane over the Western Ukraine early this month, falling about 80 persons, Soviet sources reported Thursday.

Although many Soviet air disasters go unreported, an Estonian news-paper had disclosed the loss of a civil airliner flying from Tallin to Kishinev via Lvov on May 3. At about the same time, the military newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda carried the obitnaries of several senior air force officers who died "tragically" on that same date. Many Westerney diplomats had suspected that the air force officers died in an air crash, " but the press did not report this. According to the Soviet sources, the two planes collided while on an

New York Times Service SAN SALVADOR — They still occasionally inveigh against the coming Communist invasion and speak emotionally of imspecified threats to the fatherland. But some of the steam seems to have gone out of El Salvador's rightist political parties, according to many politi-cians and foreign diplomats here.

Roberto d'Aubuisson, leader of the far-right Nationalist Republican Alliance, appears to be struggling to recover from a crushing defeat in recent legislative elec-tions. The "People's Park"

Although Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens are continuous areas on the map, they are very different. Hyde Park is the 'people's park' and home of Speaker's Corner, where for centuries protestors have come to shout, demonstrate and march. Here, too, is the famous Serpentine Lake and Rotten Row, where you can canter along a sandy straight mile. The park is also a track for many of Mayfair's joggers. Kensington Gardens has a

U.S. May Admit More Cambodians 15,000 Refugees Barred as Risks May Be Reviewed Again

By Bernard Gwertzman

WASHINGTON — Reagan administration officials say they are examining a possibility that some of 15,000 Cambodian refugees in Thailand who have been ruled ineligible for entry to the United States may deserve a second screening.

As the United States prepares to wind down its program for the refugees, Secretary of State George P. Shultz has been studying the program. He plans to discuss the issue Friday with the Thai foreign minis-ter, Air Chief Marshal Siddhi Sa-

In the meantime, Mr. Shultz's aides are dealing with a letter sent to President Ronald Reagan on Tuesday by two key members of the House Foreign Affairs Com-mittee, asking whether the refugee program was perhaps being ended

The letter was signed by Representative Stephen J. Solarz, Democrat of New York, who is chairman of the subcommittee on Asia, and Representative Jim Leach, Republican of Iowa. It said that the refugee screening program, under which 15,000 Cambodians have been barred as security risks, was inconsistent with guidelines issued by the administration in 1983.

They said they believed that "a compassionate review of the reject-ed cases would find many deserv-ing people to be admissible and would allow them to become productive citizens of this country as our refugee program intended."

A State Department official said Wednesday that the main problem involved Cambodians who might have been linked to the Khmer

Many lawmakers agree with Mr.
Lott that they are ill equipped to manage the Pentagon budget, but the tendency to play politics is only one reason. Legislators who have prime responsibility for Pentagon spending agree that they focus far too much on detail and not nearly enough on the broad sweep of military policy and priorities.

As Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia, the ranking Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, said recently, "We are spending most of our time looking at the grains of sand on the beach, and we are not looking at the ocean or looking over the horizon. That is starting to change a bit as a new generation of congressional experts, including Mr. Nunn and Representative Les Aspin, the new chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, take larger roles on Capitol Hill. Mr. Aspin, a Wisconsin Democrat, created a new panel within his committee this year that would examine long-range military goals.

In his view, Congress should act as a board of directors overseeing Pentagon policy. "And we should assert ourselves when we think things have gotten screwed up," Said Mr. Aspin, who worked at the Pentagon in the late 1960s before RTHOMP50N his election to Congress. He concedes, however, that it will be next year at the earliest before Congress begins to change its procedures. The lawmakers now are evaluating more than $300 billion in military spending proposals, and their main question probably is the one mentioned by Mr. Addabbo: Who gets what?

Mr. Lou's district on the Gulf Coast of Mississippi includes the Ingalls Shipyard, Reesler Air Force Base and a variety of smaller military installations. ### Trans-Atlantic Farm War?

America is about to subsidize farm exports, giving part of its government stockpile to traders who can then sell more cheaply abroad. This is partly an attack on the European Community, judged unwilling to discuss current disputes meaningfully, and partly an effort to prevent America's farm lobby from pressing for even stronger action in a pre-election year. Is it simply a warning to Europe, or the start of a real fight?

The present action is relatively mild - a $2-billion dumping program stretched out over three years. The EC devotes some $5 billion to food export subsidies each year.

Neither figure reveals the full profligacy of government support for farmers. The Community spends about $14 billion a year to enable its farmers to go on producing lakes of unwanted wine, mountains of beef and butter and dunes of cereals and sugar, and it is busy destroying unsalable stocks of citrus fruit it has purchased. The United States has recently been spending between $10 and $19 billion a year on income support for farmers, with costly programs ranging from peanuts and tobacco to dairy farming. In financial terms there has been little difference in the balance of extravagance.

The Europeans probably have the more difficult problem, in the sense that they have approximately the same adult population but twice as many farmers. Against the original aims of the Community, they have de-voted their protection money less to helping farmers get more efficient or get out than to guaranteeing high prices - which discourages them from doing either.

It would be foolish to expect farm policy to have purely economic objectives. It is largely a branch of social policy, expressly designed to protect farmers against the worst vagaries of the markets. But any social policy has to be judged by the efficiency with which it achieves its ends, and current farm policy fails that test.

Price supports and subsidies favor the big. relatively efficient farmers more than the struggling. In America nearly half the federal payments to agriculture are absorbed by 13 percent of the farmers; other farmers benefit little because they produce little, yet they are sorely in need. Waste and inequity are similarly marked in Europe. Greater selectivity would cut costs and end the process - which Europe has carried to extremes - of subsidizing excess output which governments can then only dump below cost on foreign markets or use for compost.

There were signs a year ago that Europe was becoming less profligate, but reform has not yet been vigorous. West Germany's present refusal to cut cereal prices in the face of glut is particularly dispiriting. In America there are sweeping government proposals to cut price supports and loans and force farmers to export aggressively if they wish to survive. These plans may be emaciated by Congress. But adoption, even in modified form, will convert Europe's present policies from an irritant to a major problem for American farmers. And for Europe the cost of existing farm policy will soar - particularly if, in the meantime, the dollar falls. The two sides may be on a collision course.

With goodwill, and a rational approach by both sides, a decent solution could be found: It would cushion the marginal farmer, but decreasingly over the years, and avoid an international contest to dump surplus products abroad. The trouble is that when every farmer is thought to be a marginal voter, goodwill and reason are both at a discount. This is why the present American measures, only a mild punch in the snout, could herald a damaging war.

Reagan's Hostage Crisis

Work with anybody who may be able to help; use private and unpublicized channels; keep hoping for the best ... That is not an exhilarating formula. It prolongs the agony for the families of four Americans and two French citizens cruelly held hostage by terrorists in Lebanon. It leaves unresolved the dilemma of how to negotiate with terrorists while not rewarding them. And it does not explain the Reagan administration's passivity in responding to Iran's tacit approval of hijacking. That formula, however, is the best that the administration can devise for dealing with Islamic holy war zealots. President Reagan, it turns out, is every bit as frustrated as President Carter was by the 1979 U.S. Embassy seizure in Tehran.

The difference is that the Carter hostages stayed in the concentrated glare of the world spotlight. The "students" who invaded the embassy were supported by Iran's government, and America's humiliation was rubbed in nightly by television. The Reagan hostages are held by ghostly figures in unknown places. Kidnapped in Beirut months ago, they include a U.S. Embassy official, a reporter, a minister and the local director of Catholic Relief Services. No one assails Mr. Reagan for speaking softly and trying to enlist unofficial gobetweens like the Reverend Jesse Jackson.

Another country has been entangled in the negotiations. Kuwait courageously tracked down and convicted 17 terrorists responsible in 1983. Unless it now frees the 17, the Beirut kidnappers threaten to kill the hostages. Last December, Kuwait's moderate regime rejected that demand when hijackers diverted a Kuwaiti airliner to Iran. So once again it must calculate the risk of reprisal.

for bombing American and French embassies

All this calls for sympathy as the White House looks for a light in a jungle. The administration's occasional bluster notwithstanding. there are no easy remedies for terrorism. Secretary of State George Shultz's bad idea of reprisal raids is a case in point. It probably spawned the recent embarrassing headlines about American involvement with a Lebanese gang that attempted free-lance murders. Surely a better idea is to punish terrorism lawfully.

There is a clear opportunity now pending, involving Iran, that arises from the hijacking of that Kuwaiti airliner, when two Americans were killed. The hijackers were arrested and the State Department demanded that Iran try the hijackers, as required by agreements it had signed. Nearly six months later, the hijackers have yet to be tried. The United States still issues hollow protests -- but has not yet called for an international boycott of Tehran's airport, the lawful remedy. One can imagine what Ronald Reagan might have said, running against Jimmy Carter, about such a limp sequel to a national affront.

Helping to Save Topsoil

As Congress gets down to writing a new farm bill, one of the few points of general agreement is that it makes no sense to subsidize farming on highly fragile land. Deciding what to do about it is another matter. The Senate Agriculture Committee will soon be considering amendments that, taken together, could help save both farmers and topsoil.

Wind- and water-caused erosion met or surpassed records last year in areas from the Pacific Northwest to the Southeast. Almost half of America's cropland is losing soil faster than it can be replaced. Many specialists worry that crosion will worsen as financially pressed farmers abandon conservation measures and as more farmland falls into the hands of absentee owners. Nothing can be done about bad weather, but much can be done about the farming practices and congressional policies that increase the weather's toll in topsoil.

A few years ago Senator William Armstrong drew congressional attention to the fact that farm subsidies tied to crop production had encouraged the plowing up of millions of acres of fragile grasslands while adding to unneeded and expensive crop surpluses. A more self-defeating set of policies is hard to imagine.

The Armstrong bill failed to clear Congress last ware but proposed prove offered by Senslast year, but proposals now offered by Sena-tors Jesse Helms, Robert Kasten and Richard Lugar would not only accomplish the purpose of the original bill but strengthen it significantly. Most important are provisions to deny all federal subsidies to farmers who plow highly erodible land - with exceptions given only to land farmed in the last five years, and then only if conservation practices were used -and establish a reserve that would permanently convert 30 million of the most erodible acres to less damaging use. Taking these lands out of production would be a boon to the environment and would help boost farmers' incomes and cut taxpayers' costs by avoiding production of surplus crops. Congress does not get many chances to do so much good so quickly. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

The process through which the Administration profits politically by relief funds does not lie primarily in the expectation that the beneficiaries will vote for the source of their relief. ### Democracy Is Alien to Central America

Reagan and most of his critics agree that protecting U.S. interests in Central America requires promoting democracy. This admirable objective is based on a dangerous myth that can only burden U.S. policy with unrealistic goals and increase pressure for deeper military involvement when less drastic measures prove inadequate. Moderate democrats have always been in short supply in Central America. Centuries of exploitative and cruel Spanish rule have been followed by a nearly unbroken string of local autocrats whose brutality and corruption helped inspire the term "banana republic." The spirit of tolerance and the commitment to laws and institutions that enable democracies to ride out heavy political and economic storms are completely alien to Central America. The medieval, corporatist political legacy be-queathed by the Spaniards equates political competition with anarchy and subordinates individual rights to the requirements of social harmony. in fact, the countries of the region are less like modern nationstates than quarreling fiefdoms whose ruling clans confuse government with grand larceny.

We are told that Central America is changing. Recent economic growth has been impressive and a critical mass of Central Americans from all classes are now determined, it is said, to escape the cycle By Alan Tonelson of repression, revolution and foreign intervention. Unfortunately, this is mostly wishful thinking. It is in large part a fiction of the instant experts, often based on little more than a quick junket to the region. These are the people who sancti-elections and certify atrocity charges, deciding which Central Americans ment the label "democrat." They tend to know little about the region but have managed to mire North Americans in a pointless debate over which faction best deserves U.S. support, trying to draw impossibly fine distinctions among individual battalion commanders and gnerrilla chieftains.

In fact there are no white hats in Central America. The principal belligerents are primarily interested not in promoting tolerance but in controlling the matchless might of the state. As for the moderates, they know that they can best stay alive and even enjoy the perks of office by fronting for the extremists, not by challenging them. Thus, El Sal-vador's president, José Napoleon Duarte, presses neither land reform nor peace talks, while the political leaders of the Salvadoran left say nothing about the atrocities committed by their guerrilla allies.

Some advocates of democratization argue that Costa Rica's history proves that moderates can triumph in Central America. It is an appealing vision. But the amount of blood shed since the late 1970s argues differently and indicates that the region's masses are likely to be abused and impoverished no matter which side prevails.

What can the United States do? A hardheaded America-first policy would focus less on domestic politics and more on keeping Soviet and Cuban bases out. What happens inside Central America is of little interest to the United States; Washington should avoid trying to force either the right or the left to undertake political reform. Worries about subversion in the larger states - Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia — can best be addressed by using economic policy to improve conditions in those nations. For 40 years, Third World politicians of all persuasions have pro-claimed featty to U.S. democratic ideals. Everyone has fallen short, but both liberals and conservatives in the United States continue to dream about finding the vital center in the developing world. Today both sides portray their favorite bands of Central American cutthroats as champions of freedom and often suggest that Washington is morally obligated to save them. Apparently they do not see that this is most likely to plunge the United States into another senseless war.

The writer, associate editor of For-eign Policy magazine, contributed this comment to The New York Times.

Aug. 17, 1982, when the United States and China agreed that U.S. military aid to Taiwan would slowly tail off and eventually cease. On that basis, Beijing rolled out the welcome mat to a series of American visitors. To each the Chinese expressed interest in acquiring American techno-logy. But different U.S. officials rendered different answers.

Secretary of State George Shultz, who visited China in February 1983, seemed aloof. He combined skepticism about the effectiveness of the economy with doubts that Beijing would stay apart from Moscow.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, visiting in September 1983, seemed more interested, although he refused a blank check on sales of sophisticated military equipment. But President Reagan, in March 1984, flashed a green light for technology transfer. And in May, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige announced in Beijing a policy to ease technology transfers to China. Secretary of the Navy John Lehman went to China in August 1984 and arranged for sale of a package of naval equipment, including anti-submarine warfare weapons and gaspowered engines for destroyers. As a symbol of that deal, three destroyers powered by the engine were to make a port call to Shanghai this month. The call would have been the first by a U.S. warship to China since 1949. But on April 10, China's Communist Party secretary, Hu Yaobang, told journalists from Australia and New Zealand that the American destroyers would not carry nuclear weapons. On the ing such kind things about Taiwan that the progress in U.S.-Chinese reconfused the issue of ships bearing nuclear arms with ships powered by nuclear engines. Behind-the-scenes negotiations convinced U.S. diplomats of a multiple muddle,

David Lange insisted on assurances

For one thing, the Chinese are divided on the pace of internal eco-nomic reform. Hu Yaobang wants to conciliate the go-slow interests. His followers apparently line up with the party chief on all issues — even the destroyer visit, where he seems to have blundered.

Many Chinese are also gushing about the Soviet regime of Mikhail Gorbachev. Some fear that a defense deal with the United States would compromise better ties with Moscow. Finally. Chinese officials seem to be truly confused about what military equipment they want. Some talk about purchasing anti-tank weapons, others about air defense systems; still 🎄 others are window-shopping.

But the United States also is uncertain. Taiwan and most other American friends in the Western Pacific point out that there is a much better case for enhancing Chinese anti-sir-craft and anti-tank strength than for improving the Chinese navy. A study by the Heritage Foundation shows that a stronger Chinese navy could do little to contest the Soviet fleet in the Pacific. But it would be bound to worry Taiwan, and to sharpen territorial conflicts with the Philippines.

Italy Celebrates Etruscan Year

by Susan Lumsden

LORENCE — Modern Italians bear few similarities to their Roman forebears. The legendary Roman systems of law, administration, baths and roads, which civilized the ancient world from Egypt to England, are small comfort to the person stymied by a railroad strike or trying to buy stamps at a post office that doesn't keep change. This apparent lack of system may well be a legacy of the ancient Etruscans, whose decentralized but highly artistic civilization is being celebrated throughout Italy in a series of exhibitions publications and conferences.

Etruscan Year is concentrated in Tuscany, as were the ancient Ermscans. It is designed not only to attract tourists but to publicize the many discoveries made since the last Etruscan exhibition — in Milan, in 1955 — and since the multidisciplinary science of Etruscology was distilled from the mainstream of archaeology in 1942.

Unlike the Romans, who diligently recorded their history, the Etruscans left few written traces. What is known of them has been deciphered from the art in their monumental tombs, most of them discovered only in the last century.

Greek and Roman writers reported the Etruscans, who flourished from about the eighth through second centuries B.C., to be a decadent lot given over to idle games and loose women. It should be noted that the Greeks and Romans were competitors for the lucrative Mediterranean trade routes that the Etruscans plied, principally with silver, copper and above all iron ore from the island of Elba. Recent excavations at Populonia on the Tuscan coast revealed a smelting complex that has been described as the Pittsburgh of the ancients.
Theories on the Etruscans' origin abound.

The latest, according to Massimo Pallottino, the founder of Etruscology, is that the Etruscans were the native people of Tuscany and absorbed waves of immigration, probably from the eastern Mediterranean, that influenced and reinforced their stock.

TTED on hilltops for natural defense, Erruscan cities such as Arezzo, Ficsole, Volterra, Cortona and Perugia constituted the first urban civilization in Italy. Unlike later Roman cities with their similar geometric plans, the Etruscan settlements were each omite different as new excavations at Roselle and Cerveteri have confirmed. Each city can be worlds apart, with a distinctive architecture, accent and pride that pays and only lip service to Rome.

The Erroscans' main legacy, however, was their art, buried with the dead. In its early stages. Etruscan art had a refined savagery similar to that of Egyptian, Aztec and Mavan art. As trade with Greece increased, so did the influence of the more graceful Hellenic art. At its height, Etruscan art is almost indistinguishable from Greek, particularly in sculpture. The finest pieces are in the Villa Giulia Museum in Rôme and the Archaeological Museum in Florence.

Most are terra-cotta, used descriptively on the sarcophagi of the rich. The dead patrician was portrayed in a reclining statue that covered his coffin, whose sides were decorat-ed with reliefs of his favorite scenes from Greek mythology. The Etruscans were gifted artisans whose traditions have filtered through the Renaissance to modern Italy. Ordinary household objects such as vases, lamps and mirrors had a remarkable refinement and fantasy. Possessing metals in abundance, the Etruscans used bronze for trinkets and statues alike. Their two best-known works in bronze are known as the Orator and the Chimera, both from the third century B.C. and both in the collection of the Archaeological Museum in Florence, Brought to Florence 400 years ago by Cosimo de Medici, ostensibly for restoration, the Chimera has been sent with great fanfare to its native Arezzo for the Etruscan exhibitions there. One masterpiece that will be conspicuous in its absence is the Enfronios crater, now at the Metropolitan Museum in New York. This intricately decorated wine vessel is believed to have been stolen from an Etruscan tomb in Cerveteri about 10 years ago and illegally exported from Italy. "To officially ask to borrow it would be to sanction its theft," said Professor Mauro Cristofani, curator of the Etruscan Civilization exhibition in Florence In spite of their elaborate preparations for death, the Etruscans were anything but a funereal people. Their vases and frescoes feature scenes of dancing, hunting, banqueting and love, D.H. Lawrence was fascinated by the phallic imagery that decorated the entrances to the tombs, particularly those of Cerveteri. His novel "Etruscan Places" is being reissued this year in two new Italian emancipation. Her artistic chroniclers show her participating in sports, games and banquets with men. This last particularly bothered the Hellenic writers. In comparable Greek society, the only women to attend these feasts were the courtesans, identifiable in paintings by their blond hair, presumably bleached. In Etruscan paintings the women are brunettes and therefore, probably, wives. Title and property were transferred legally through the female line and the women were educated for the responsibility.

An example of the laws regarding this can be seen carved in stone at the exhibition on Etruscan writing in Perugia. Another classic on display there is the Book of Zagreb, the longest known Etruscan text, written on lin-en that was found wrapped around a mummy in Egypt. It is on loan from the Zagreb Museum in Yugoslavia. The Vatican Musemm is offering courses about the still mostly untranslatable Etruscan language, and visi-tors to the Archeological Museum in Florence can have their names rendered in Etrus-

Eventually, Etruscan and Roman territory overlapped. When the city of Tarquinia was at the height of Etruscan civilization in the sixth century B.C., its kings were also kings of Rome. Roman boys were sent to Etruscan cities for higher education. The artistic and independent Etruscans, however, were no match for the Roman bureaucratic machine. More than conquered, they were assimilated from the top as their kings became magistrates in the expanding Roman republic.

All the exhibitions run through Oct. 20 and cost 5,000 lire (about $2.50) each.

Carnegie Hall's Second Century

by Samuel G. Freedman

EW YORK -- On a rainy afternoon not long ago, the Detroit Symphony held a rehearsal in Carnegie Hall that was open to the half's benefactors. There were young mothers with infants in their laps, and businessmen on long lunches. There were also a number of older women, with gray hair and skin like parchment.
Were their husbands at work? Were they widows? Were they afraid to go out alone for a concert at night? No matter. When the music began, some of them closed their eyes and others tilted their heads just a bit, as if to sieve the sound from the air. For a few hours in their lives, nothing would matter except the music. There was nothing exceptional about the afternoon — it was not even a concert, after all, only a slightly glorified run-through — and yet there was a pleasure inside Carnegie Hall.

Yehudi Menuhin called Carnegie Hall "a building built more by music than by man."
In 94 years, its celebrated performers have included Tchaikovsky, Ignace Jan Paderew-ski, Leonard Bernstein, Walter Damrosch, Jascha Heifetz, Vladimir Horowitz, Leopold Stokowski, Gustav Mahler, Benny Good-man, Duke Ellington, Frank Sinatra, Judy Garland, Clarence Darrow, Lenny Bruce and, in their only known duet performance Isaac Stern and Jack Benny. Carnegie Hall has also welcomed dreamers like Giovanni Buitoni, a food-company executive who rented the hall to sing opera, and Dr. Charles D. Kelman, a surgeon who played jazz saxophone. There is a sort of eccentric-in-residence who comes every day to sing opera at the portal to the hall; he is said to have a particular fondness for "La Forza del Des-

OR all these performers, the famous and the obscure, Carnegie Hall casts a spell. The magic of Carnegie Hall is more than its acoustics—which Serge Kous-sevitsky said had "a sonority like a Stradivarius" — and more than the sum of the musicians who have graced its stage. Other concert halls arguably approach Carnegie's acoustics — the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam and Symphony Hall in Boston, to name two - and other halls can claim imposing alumni. In a rather special way, Carnegie Hall exemplifies not only excellence in performance but the development of American music and musicians, classical and popular. It has moved from being a citadel of European music and European musicians, designed to delight the gentry and uplift the rabble, to a place of catholic taste with room enough for a Handel opera, a Jerome Kern musical and a Steve Reich octet.

"The thing that's unique," said Isaac Stern, president of Carnegie Hall and the man who led the campaign to save it from demolition in 1960, "is that to every major performer, every major conductor, it's their hall. It's the queen hall of New York. Not a not a si a single vocalist has not identified playing Carnegie Hall as the pinnacle."

Considering his bonds to Carnegie Hall, Stern might be forgiven a bit of hyperbole. But countless musicians offer the same praise. "You know the old joke, 'How do you get to Carnegie Hall?" 'Practice, practice,' " said Howard Shanet, a conductor, author and professor of music at Columbia University. "It's significant that it's not told about Town Hall or Aeolian Hall or Alice Tully Hall. Carnegie Hall is the landmark for seri-

Carnegie Hall is beginning a $50-million fund drive that its principals hope will carry the hall into its second century. Most of the money will go toward renovation of the building, although the main hall, with its prized acoustics, will be left unchanged except for cosmetic improvements. Seven million dollars is earmarked for the hall's endownent and $3 million for new artistic programs. In essence, the campaign aims to make the hall physically and financially secure; it now has cracked masonry and an annual operating deficit in excess of $1 million. Financial freedom would allow Camegie Hall to become more daring in its programming, with increases in jazz, ethnic music and new-music concerts, expansion of the opera and musical theater series, the creation of commissions for American composers and possibly the formation of an American opera series. Carnegie Hall will close next May for about seven months of construction. Negoti-ations are under way for the New York Philharmonic to play at the reopening. Such a concert would suggest a healing of old wounds, for the departure of the Philhar-.

The interior will be little changed under planned renovation.

monic for Lincoln Center 25 years ago brought Carnegie Hall to the brink of destruction. It has been largely forgotten how bitter the "battle of the halls" was. Lincoln Center's Philharmonic Hall (since renamed Avery Fisher Hall) Inred from Carnegie Hall not only the Philharmonic but the Boston, Cleveland, Chicago and Philadelphia or-chestras (all of which have since returned to Carnegie, dissatisfied with the acoustics up-town). Workmen painted X's over the windows in Carnegie Hall in preparation for the wrecking ball, and highbrow hooligans began stealing the portraits of conductors from the lobby. Then New York City bought the hall for $5 million and leased it to the newly formed Carnegie Hall Corp.

"It's absolutely hair-raising to think that we lost the old Met and almost lost Carnegie, too," said the mezzo-soprano Marilyn Horne. "If there's ever another problem, Isaac can call me and I'll lie prostrate in front of the place."

It was here in 1964 that the Beatles played their first New York concert, here that in 1927 the curious sneaked in through windows and dangled from fire escapes to listen to the debut of Yehudi Menuhin, such suspense had the 11-year-old violinist stirred. Paul Robeson in 1959, Horowitz in 1965 and Sinatra in 1974 selected Carnegie to end retirements from public performance. It was on Carnegie's stage that Stern played Bach's Partita in D minor as the pallbearers carried off the bier of Sol Hurok, the impresario who was so much a part of the hall's history.

Even fiascoes achieve a certain weight as part of Carnegie Hall lore. "Any man who has not fallen on his face in Carnegie," the cellist Gregor Piatigorsky once said, "has not lived a life in music." In 1927 there was a performance of George Antheil's "Ballet Mécanique," a piece that integrated industrial noise with music. First the sirens came in a few bars too late, drowning out the orchestra; then the airplane propellers blew the sheet music off the stands. Legend also has it that, during a recital with Rachmaninoff, the violinist Fritz Kreisler lost his place. "Where are we?" he asked furtively. The pianist answered, "In Carnegie Hall."

The joke has a certain point. A performer is always aware of playing in Carnegie Hall -from the acoustics, the audience, the artistic standards, the ghosts. Menuhin remembers being told as a boy that the fire ax backstage was reserved for performers who did not measure up. In 1928, Horowitz and the British conductor Sir Thomas Beecham, both making their Carnegie Hall debuts.

The Oratorio Society Chorus,

wrestled throughout Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto. The first night, Horowitz triumphed, taking the curtain calls and the headlines ("Pianist Causes Furor," said one). The next evening, Beecham one-upped him with a post-concert speech of thanks to the audience, and Horowitz, who knew little English, could only linger in the wings.

From the very beginning, a sense of importance, even destiny, has surrounded Carnegie Hall. "Who shall venture to paint its history or its end?" Andrew Carnegie asked as the cornerstone was laid on May 15, 1890. "It is built to stand for ages, and during these ages it is probable that this hall will inter-twine itself with the history of our country."

This prophecy profited from geography. When Carnegie Hall opened, it sat on the northern frontier of Manhattan — Goat Hill, a prime grazing tract. As the borough pushed uptown like a glacier, it carried the center of the music community with it. The architect William Burnet Tuthill had designed Carnegie Hall to be the largest, most elegant hall in the city, and it was soon linked by subway to the outer boroughs. Meanwhile, New York as a city was achieving primacy over Philadelphia and Boston. largely based on its ability to attract the greatest number of artists and their patrons.

In the largest sense, Andrew Carnegie and Carnegie Hall were part of a philosophical climate. The hall was built during the socalled American Renaissance, the years from Reconstruction to World War I. There was a sense that with the frontier conquered - or so the historian Frederick Jackson Turner had declared in a famous 1893 speech - the time had come for Americans to trade their buckskins for cufflinks. Libraries were erected to resemble palazzos, war monuments to recall imperial Rome. The 1893 Columbian Exposition in Chicago saw Venice and Athens recreated on the shores of Lake Michigan. In 1900, Symphony Hall in Boston opened. (The third great American concert hall, the 1857 Academy of Music in Philadelphia, was the only one that predated the American Renaissance.) An American aristocracy arose, a class of mercantile royalty. The Astors, Whitneys, Fricks, Rockefellers
— these were Carnegie's peers, these were the people who filled the boxes of his hall when it opened on May 5, 1891.

One newspaper likened the opening-night atmosphere to "the dedication of a great temple." But the priests were all Europeans. Tchaikovsky conducted his "Marche Solen-nelle" and Walter Damrosch led Berlioz's Te Deum. For all the nationalism implicit in the American Renaissance, it carried a presumption that everything good, everything re-fined, resided in the Old World. Typical of the inferiority complex was this lament in the Musical Courier's report on the opening of Carnegie Hall: "Where in [American] art, music, literature, politics, religion is just such a forceful, fiery, magnetic man such as Tchaikovsky? You can't name him."

In time, however. Europe's calamities the Depression, two World Wars, the Holocaust, Communist expansion — drove many of its finest artists to America. Heifetz, Ho-

Taking the Measure of Young Dancers

by Anna Kisselgoff

EW YORK - The oft-heard lament nowadays is that the age of great dancing is past. Yes, there are individuals who stand out, but the galaxy of stars, especially those associated with ballet and once taken for granted, seems to have been replaced by a field of efficient technicians. Of course, we say, some of today's young dancers can execute turns and jumps that their predecessors could not. But where are the Margot Fonteyns, the Erik Bruhns and Allegra Kents, the Bolshoi men who hartled through the air or the dominating modern-dance presences from Martha Graham on down who needed only to step on a stage for eyes to remain riveted upon them for hours?

Perhaps we have been looking in the wrong direction. Dancing has changed and styles of stage behavior we once accepted might now strike us as less than contemporary. After 25 years of emphasis on pure dance - a trend that has been consistently popular - we cry that dancers have no personality. Maybe we should start looking, then, at dancers whose personality emerges from the sheer quality of their dancing. It isn't their acting, their mannerisms or their manners that bring them into relief. It is simply how they dance.

On these terms, an abundance of new talent has come to the fore. In fact there are so many good dancers on view in different types of companies that the time has come to take stock. Very often these dancers are not necessarily the most obvious examples. Modern-dance companies especially tend to present an ensemble picture in which individuals are rarely singled out. The ballet companies attract attention to their stars or principals, but often a soloist can turn in a performance as good as or even better than that of a principal.

American Ballet Theater's season can turn this observation into an adage. Two of its soloists - Amanda McKerrow and Peter Fonseca — and a young corps member, Bonnie Moore, have delivered among the best performances in the company. In the New York City Ballet, Gen Horinchi, a corps dancer, has created a stir in major roles with a polished virtuosity and a confident stage presence. More recently, Melissa Podcasy, a principal who rose from the ranks in the Pennsylvania Ballet, has made a starting impression through a tantalizing mixture of abandon and classical form.

Some of these dancers have shared the same teachers; Mary Day, for one, at the Washington School of Ballet, must be doing something more than right. Her pupils have included some of the best dancers around -McKerrow, Moore, Kevin McKenzie and Marianna Tcherkassky, all of American Ballet Theater, as well as the Joffrey Ballet's James Canfield and Patricia Miller.

The Ballet Theater contingent of young talent has demonstrated something interesting. When Mikhail Baryshnikov became artistic director, he concentrated on developing a small group of dancers as new principals or as partners for himself. This group — Cynthia Harvey, Robert La Fosse, Cheryl Yeager, Susan Jaffe and, to some extent, Danilo Radojevic — has reached a plateau. Some have regressed: some have progressed, but not into major dancers.

By contrast, Fonseca, originally nurtured by Antony Tudor but then given more neoclassical roles by Baryshnikov, is probably one of the best Balanchine dancers on view. His performances in "Donizetti Variations" and "Theme and Variations" rank among the best ever, with classical precision, exciting jumps, splendid technique and verve.

McKerrow was at her best in "Donizetti" when dancing with Fonseca. Although she is not Balanchine-trained, she knows how to give classical dancing its fullest value. This is what Tudor recognized when he cast her in "The Leaves are Fading."

Moore is a revelation. One sees her as slightly gawky in the ensembles, but as Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet" she proves herself a dancer who needs to stand up above the crowd. Her acting is surprisingly convincing for a dancer still in her teens. Her Juliet is stirred by new feelings that she is determined Horiuchi was a whiz kid from the first, as a special student from Japan at the School of American Ballet workshop performances. His short height seemed to preclude his part-nering possibilities in the City Ballet but, as certain Balanchine ballets have made clear. you cannot keep a brilliant dancer down. He has led the male ensemble in "Stars and Suripes" as it has never been led before. Every double air turn, every entrechat has been rendered larger than life.

Podcasy is a rarity, a dancer who looks modest but whose charm and lyricism seep into a viewer's consciousness with full force. Already noticeable for her clean dancing when the Pennsylvania Ballet was directed by Barbara Weisberger and Benjamin Harkarvy, she has developed more fully under Robert Weiss's leadership.

Weiss cast her in the role he created in 1974 for Gelsey Kirkland in the pas de deux "Awakening," recently presented at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Partnered by Marin Boieru, Podcasy opened up the choreography just as Weiss brought out a new aspect in her dancing. The result made for a new sensuality in what was mainly a neo-classical showpiece. Looking like a genteel

Young British Chefs Carry Message of Fresh Cuisine to Counties

by Marian Burros

ONDON — The culinary groundswell that be-gan in Britain a decade ago with a handful of excellent restaurants has entered a second, broader phase. The first establishments are in London and run by chefs from the Continent, but many restaurants are now staffed with home-grown talent and spread around the countryside.

Young chefs such as Nicholas Gill, Allan Garth and John Webber, who are English, and Raymond Blanc, who is French-born, have carried the message of fresh, creative cuisine to the counties. Leicestershire, Oxfordshire, West Sussex and Devon, among others, can claim excellent restaurants.

Most of the members of this new generation of chefs are in their late 20s or 30s. Some are self-taught, others have learned their craft from the Europeans who brought the movement to England. The food they prepare falls into two styles. One is clearly French; the other is a serious effort to incorporate the best of British culinary traditions with French and other international cuisines, to reinterpret, freshen and lighten such dishes as steak and kidney pie, Lancashire hot pot, blancmange and rhubarb pudding. Both styles are light-years removed from the heavy, often overcooked dishes that have been all too common in Britain.

"In the past you ate because you had to eat and you wouldn't discuss the food," said Webber, 34, chef at Gidleigh Park, a country-house hotel in Chagford, Devon, that has one Michelin star.

LA VOILE D'OR

Nico Ladenis, chef-owner of Chez Nico, a Michelin two-star restaurant in London, said it was "no longer the lowest, dirtiest job in the world, and young British boys are responding with gusto." Though the selftaught Ladenis is 51 and Greek-born, he is considered one of the new breed. At his restaurant in Battersea. south of the Thames, the mean includes such imaginative French dishes as smoked salmon with a confit of citrus fruit and mousseline of sole with sorrel sauce. Young Britons' interest in apprenticing in fine restaurants is borne out in any number of professional kitchens, including the one at Manoir aux Quat' Saisons, a magnificently restored manor house in Great Milton, Oxfordshire, which Raymond Blanc opened to great acclaim and two Michelin stars a little over a vear ago. "Out of a team of 30 in my kitchen, 10 are British and they are very good," said Blanc.

An important component in this change is a new attitude in Britain toward cooking as a profession.

As in the United States, applications from young men and women to cooking schools and apprentice positions in top restaurants have soared in the past couple of years. But while most young American chefs are seeking ways to expand regional American cui-sines, in Britain the major influence, indisputably, is French. Che's like Blanc contend that there can never be a totally British cuisine because of the lack of a fully developed culinary tradition.

Partisans of British cuisme resist this point of view, owever. Peter and Christine Smedley, owners of Ston Easton Park, in Ston Eston, Somerset, belong to a small but growing minority. The Smedleys encourage their British-born, British-trained chef, Robert Alan Jones, to revive and modernize regional English dishes such as mustard rabbit pie and Mendip snails.

Allan Garth, 31, of the Michelin-starred Gravetye Manor in Sharpthone, West Sussex, falls between these two camps. "We are always looking for some-thing different," said Garth, who applies French techniques to local ingredients.

Garth was born in the Lake District, the son of a butcher. His mother encouraged his early interest in cooking and as a teen-ager he began apprenticing in restaurants near his home. Later, he worked briefly for Albert Roux at Le Gavroche in London. Despite his varied culinary education, widened by travel to the United States, Greece and Austria, Garth feels that "young British chefs are more interested in France; the French are still taking the lead. But," he added, we are coming along." His menu reflects the progress: To the decidedly French terrine of duck fole gras and mousseline of chicken, Garth has added typically British home-smoked venison served on a bed of celeriac.

Nicholas Gill has created a similar repertory at Hambleton Hall, a Michelin one-star in a restored Victorian mansion in Oakham, Leicestershire. Alongside French-inspired creations like scallops of salmon with sorrel sauce and warm foie gras on spring salad, he serves such distinctly British dishes as rhubarb pudding with raspberry purée, and hot pot with spring regetables and dumplings.

Gill, 28, who has been at Hambleton Hall for five years, trained at Walton's and the Savoy in London and then at Maxim's in Paris. He has made a point of translating old English dishes into more elegant mod-ern versions, of which the hot pot is an excellent example, with its poached rather than boiled meats, tender baby root vegetables and a lightened version of suct dough for dumplings.

Before, people used to think a menu had to have French names they couldn't pronounce to have good food," Gill said. "But now they are wanting to look back at their heritage. They find a certain amount of and a patron said he'd had it in school and hated it. Now he loves it."

Fine local ingredients are often only sporadically available. Lamb, Angus beef, fresh fish and game of all kinds are in ready supply, and praise for their quality is unanimous, but local fresh vegetables, herbs and freits, as well as good chicken and veal, are difficult to come by, particularly in the country, where there is no network of high-quality suppliers. Garth — who be-lieves it will be five to ten years before British farmers or foragers begin meeting the growing demand — is fortunate because much of the produce and herbs he uses are grown at Gravetye Manor. Greenhouses and a walled winter garden provide a year-round supply.

There are a few native items that chefs are strangely reinctanct to use. English farmhouse cheeses, for in-stance, are superb, yet only Webber at Gidleigh Park offers more than the standard Stilton, Cheddar and Cheshire. French cheeses are preferred by chefs and by their clientele. "People laughed when we tried to serve Stilton and Cheddar," said Blanc.

Such attitudes may change. Both the appreciation and preparation of fine food are very much in flux in Britain, and a third generation of young chefs will doubtless bring further change.

"There is nothing wrong with Grandmother's cooking," said Garth, "but it wants a little refinement."

Malaria Making Comeback As Scourge of Travelers

by Roger Collis

ALARIA, the traditional scourge of explorers and missionaries, has become the maior health hazard for business travelers and tourists in many parts of Africa. Asia and Central and South America. A disease that was thought to have been brought under control by modern drugs, it is spreading and becoming more dangerous.

The World Health Organization estimates that at least 230 million people are infected or reinfected each year. In 1958, a malaria epidemic in Ethiopia was reported to have killed 150,000 people, more than the number who have did in the present famine. (Al-though the disease is endemic in poor, tropi-cal countries, it tends to erupt in epidemics from time to time). Dr. Frank Preston, medipal director of British Airways, says malaria uses three million deaths a year.

This is tragic, you'll say, but after all it's not the same for Western travelers. Well, consider. In 1982, more than 2,000 cases of malaria were brought into Britain alone, resulting in 10 deaths. Last year an American can cargo pilot who had to fly to Gambia at short notice came down with cerebral malaria in Banjul and died within three days. An English cabin attendant almost died earlier this month from the same strain, falciparum malaria. The crews of one airline recently refused to fly to Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, until they had had health assurances from

An old African hand who visits the continent on business several times a year says malaria is the only tropical disease he takes seriously. One doctor noted: "There are vaccines for cholera and typhoid, but these [diseases] aren't going to kill a Westerner—they're not in the same category as malaria."
That is the problem with malaria: There is no vaccine yet, and although there are sever-al anti-malarial tablets on the market, both by prescription and over the counter, you need expert medical advice to make sure you have adequate protection for the part of the world you are visiting. Dr. Alex Williams, medical director of British Caledonian Airways, said: "There are as many regimes for preventing malaria now as there are doctors working on the disease." Some experts say there is no perfect anti-malarial drug.

Doctors cite three main reasons for the resurgence of malaria. First, a number of Third World countries have been forced by recession to cut back on draining and spraying the swamps that are the breeding grounds of the Anopheles mosquito, carrier of the malarial parasite Plasmodium. Second, mosquitos have developed resistance to sprays such as DDT. Third, malaria is showing resistance to the basic anti-malarial drugs such as chloroquine prognanil and pyrimethamine, which superseded quinine, the traditional treatment, several years ago.

Resistant strains of malaria first appeared in Asia, possibly as a result of a large quantity of drugs taken by troops during the Vietnam War. Dr. Gilian Lea, who is on the staff of the British Anways Immunization Center in London, said nobody could really explain why resistance was spreading so alarmingly. East Africa is the big problem, she said, but the Far East and parts of India and Latin America are also of 9

New drugs, such as Fansidar and Maloprim, that have been developed against resistant strains are not necessarily effective against ordinary, non-resistant malaria. Lea said many people made the mistake of taking only the new drugs when visiting resistant areas. Instead, she said, one should take these drugs in addition to chloroquine, as there is always some ordinary malaria present as well and one can contract multiple forms of the disease simultaneously.

Experienced travelers who have not changed their tablets for years are often the most likely to neglect to take proper advice on which drug to take. Apart from the devel-opment of resistance, one reason to switch brands every so often is that many anti-malarial drugs have unpleasant side-effects if used for prolonged periods. These mainly affect the eyes and can range from temporary bluring of the vision to permanent

To get "reasonable protection against all sorts of malaria," Williams recommends taking one tablet of Maliprim plus two tablets of chloroquine a week, or one tablet of prognanil daily plus chloroquine once a week, in either case starting a week or two before traveling and continuing for six weeks after your return.

Of the four types of malaria, the most dangerous is falciparum, which can kill very rapidly. "In some regions it has become resistant to chloroquine and other drugs," Williams said, "and some people who have i are only saved by intravenous shots of old-

In fact, Lea noted, quinine is effective in nearly all cases, particularly in combination with other drugs. (It is now not normally used because of its relatively high toxicity). Quinine is a natural alkaloid, extracted from cinchona bark, and is the ingredient that gives tonic water its bitter taste. That is not to say that gin and tonic will chase away malaria, though it may provide some comfort when the mosquitos come out.

As drug treatment of malaria becomes more difficult, physical protection is more important than ever. The malaria mosquito bites after dusk, so, if you're outdoors, wear long-sleeved shirts and use a good insect repellent (one that contains N.n-diethylmeta-tolua-mide is likely to work as well as any), and spray the room when you go indoors. Women should avoid wearing perfume, which draws mosquitoes. If there is no air-conditioning, sleep under a mosquito net. Electronic devices that emit a high-frequency buzz are reported to be worse than useless keeping off mosquitoes. People who live in malarial countries often develop resistance to the disease, but this is eventually lost when they move to a cooler climate. The Westerner who has returned home after a long stint in Africa must take precautions when going back there on a trip.

Malaria can mimic the symptoms of other diseases - high fever, lassitude, headache, pains in the joints. The classic case is the traveler returning from Africa in winter and having malaria diagnosed as fin. Any suspi-cious fever should be checked out. Some-times the disease is merely suppressed by anti-malarial drugs and may break through at any time, from a couple of weeks to a year

It is easy to become blase about malaria, especially for the business traveler on a quick trip to a city like Nairobi, where the risk of infection is small. But the risk is always there, though travel agents and embassies

British Caledonian's Williams says air crews often forget to take their anti-malarial tablets. For this reason, Dr. Fridolin Holdener, medical director of Swissair, prescribes anti-malarial drugs only for crews flying to high-risk areas, in Africa; for desti-nations in Asia and South America, he prescribes a new drug, melloquin, which crews are instructed to take if they actually catch malaria. Holdener said melloquin was the only drug that had not yet encountered resis-

An effective vaccine against malaria may be two to three years away, at best. Until then the disease will remain a major health hazard for the unwary traveler.

Rome to Naples Along the Appian Way

by Paul Hofmann

ET'S say you plan to drive from Rome to Naples. If you manage to find the right exit from the Grande Raccordo Anulare, the belt road that girds the Italian capital, you get on Motor-way A-2, a section of the north-south Autostrada del Sole (Motorway of the Sun), and in two hours or so you reach the scruffy suburbs of Naples, rather distant from its magnificent bay. The highway has practically no speed limits, tolls cost at least $5, and you won't see much.

There is another option. Save the tolls, allow at least six hours for the trip, and stop en route. The medieval hilltop town of Ter-racina is a good choice, about halfway between Rome and Naples. It has superb scenery and imposing classical mins, and is at the same time a modern seaside resort with pleasant restaurants. With its palms, pines, oleanders and orange trees, Terracina is also the entrance to the Mezzogiorno, the land of the hot noonday.

Furthermore, Terracina is an ideal place to view one of the most remarkable, and enduring, feats of ancient road building. Here one can see where engineers of the Roman empire cut 115 feet (36 meters) of rock off a promontory to make space for an early stretch of the Via Apppia, better known as the Appian Way. Terracina (then Tarracina) was an important way station on this thoroughfare.
The Appian Way — now National Route

No. 7 — is the oldest and most famous of the network of paved highways built and maintained by the Romans. It extends from Rome to Capua, about 100 miles (160 kilometers) to the south, and was commissioned by Appius Claudius Caecus, then censor, in 312 B.C. The road was later extended to the cities now known as Benevento and Brindisi (the main seaport from which the Romans sailed to Greece). The extended highway, more than 350 miles long, became a lifeline of the empire.

Roman generals and statesmen recog-nized as early as the fourth century B.C. that an elaborate road system was a condition for military strength, territorial expansion and profitable trade. At the height of the empire, the system totaled more than 50,000 miles and stretched from Mesopotamia to Britain.

Roman road building was standardized. The roadbed, six to nine feet deep, consisted of a layer of large stones, above which were placed smaller stones and debris mixed with lime, topped by flagstones held together with mortar. The road surface was usually nine to twelve feet wide, allowing two chariots to pass each ways. Travelers with fresh horses could cover 75 miles a day on these roads.

Today asphalt and concrete cover the long stretches of the Roman road system that are still usable. But the ancient flagstones are visible at a few spots. Excavations show that the original foundations laid by the Roman engineers still exist and can take the punishment of modern trailer trucks.

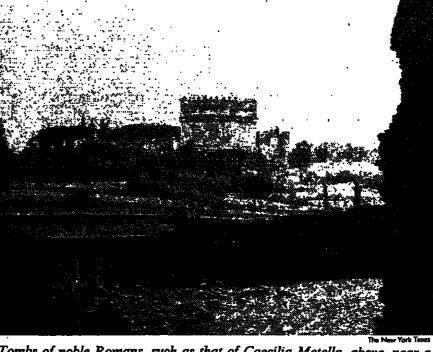

THE traveler who drives on these ancient roads needs little imagination to notice the hills, plains and azure bays that the Roman emperors, writers and merchants, the visiting barbarian potentates and the Christian missionaries must have seen.

After more than two millennia, the longarum regina viarum (queen of long-distance roads) of the ancients is still serviceable in stretches. Leaving Rome, don't take the congested Via Appia Nuova (New Appian Way) from St. John Lateran, but instead drive from the Colosseum and the Arch of Constantine past the Baths of Caracalla to the Via Appia Antica (Old Appian Way).

After passing the entrance to the early Christian catacombs and the church of "Quo Vadis?" and driving between walls lined with vineyards, pine trees and ancient statu-ary marking the tombs of prominent Romans, one comes to a few patches of flagstones - the original paving of the Appian Way. They may be hard on a car's shock absorbers, but they obviously were acceptable for chariots and horses.

Here the road narrows, and before you turn left to reach the modern Appian Way, look southward: You see the ancient road, no longer suitable for cars, heading straight up into the Alban Hills. The ancient engineers did not bother with curves to negotiate steep upgrades if they could help it. In the hamlet of Frattocchie, three miles north of the old town of Albano Laziale, the

Via Appia Nuova rejoins the Via Appia (without breakfast) starts at about $26. Antica to follow the original route for many miles. It passes the hill towns of Ariccia Genzano di Roma (a flower festival is held there each spring) and Velletri and descends into the plain before reaching Cisterna di Tombs of noble Romans, such as that of Caecilia Metella, above, near a Rome suburb, often overlooked the Appian Way.

Latina, a market town with a medieval castle topped by a squat tower.

For the next 30 miles one drives on an arrow-straight, undivided tow-lane asphalt highway between rows of pine trees, past fields of artichokes and other vegetables and over drainage canals. This section of National Route No. 7 faithfully adheres to the nononsense directness of the ancient road. The Italians call it la fettuccia, the ribbon.

This stretch of the Appian Way crosses what for centuries were known as the Pontine Marshes, once a maiarial swampland. The area was repeatedly drained by the Caesars and by various popes, then abandoned by succeeding generations. In the 1920s, un-der Mussolini, the marshes were transformed into fertile farmland.

At the spot where the Appian Way approaches Terracina, the bright limestone cliffs of the Monti Ausoni, a spur of the Central Apennines, reach toward the Tyrrhenian Sea. On the 748-foot summit of the barren promontory sits a vast horizontal structure of limestone and marble, topped by arches, the foundation of an ancient temple dedicated to Zens or Venus (the attribution is debated).

Terracina, a town of about 38,000, has two parts - an old city built on a ledge below the ancient road, and a new town on the plains, The old town is a cluster of medieval houses with narrow streets, irregular but neatly kept stairways, cats sunning themselves on ancient mosaics. Its central square was the forum, or marketplace, of a thriving Roman city. The late 11th-century cathedral on this intimate piazza was built into a ruined temple of the defied Emperor Augustus; substantial remains of it are preserved.

The panorama from the old town embraces the Pontine plains and, to the south, a bay with what looks like a rocky island with three peaks off to the right. This is the promontory of Monte Circeo, the mountain of the enchantress Circe, which is linked to the mainland by a tongue of flat ground. Modern Terracina is built along the Appian Way, which for half a mile is known as Via Roma and is the town's main thoroughfare and shopping street. A seaside promenade skirting a small harbor and bathing beach is lined with hotels, restaurants, cafes and new apartment houses.

In Terracina one can get fresh seafood, although catches in the Tyrrhenian Sea are less abundant than they were when the Appian Way was still the main route to the south. Fresh fish is often sold in the outdoor market along the canal that runs from the Via Roma

For a meal, try the La Capannina restaurant, on the seaside (telephone 727-339), or Perusini, 42 Piazza della Repubblica (727-052), a trattonia in the center of the modern town. Lunch or dinner for two with pasta, veal or fish, vegetables from nearby farms and local wine will be about $20 at either restaurant. The Palace Hotel, 6 Lungomare Matteotti (727-285), has rooms with a fine view of the bay. A double room with bath

Where Via Roma again becomes the Appian Way at the town's eastern end, it passes a steep cliff that separates the sea and the promontory. There is parking space nearby, and it is worth getting out of the car. At eye level one can see the letters CXX (120 in feet high in the smooth face of the rock. Other Roman numerals are visible higher up. They relate to the original route of the Appi-an Way at this spot, which climbed up the promontory and descended on the other side. The ancient workers marked the depth of the hillside they cut away at intervals of 10 Roman feet, starting from the top. (The Roman foot, at 296 millimeters, was slightly which is 304.8 millimeters.) The inscriptions are an eloquent testimonial to ancient engi-neering skills and to the backbreaking laborof the workmen, probably all of whom were slaves. Long after Appius Claudius, it was decided to reroute the road so that it ran a level stretch along the shore.

Roman numerals) engraved one and a half

After Terracina the Appian Way turns inland to Fondi, then returns to the shore at Formia. Southeast of Formia, the highway solits into several sections. No. 7 quater is a scenic coastal road to Naples: No. 7 bis links Capua and Naples. (Quater is Latin for four times, and bis means twice.) The original Appian Way turns east to Benevento, bypassing Naples, and proceeds to Brindisi.

One can see vestiges of the queen of roads all the way to the lower Adriatic Sea - an occasional milestone with the name of a consul or an emperor, tombs of noble Ro-. mans who wanted to be buried at the wayside, flagstones and, near Benevento, bridges that are nearly 2,000 years old. By the harbor of Brindisi, a 66-foot-high column is the survivor of a pair that announced the end of the Appian Way.
You will find many Terracinas on these old roads - cities and towns with an illustrious history, classical ruins, medieval castles and cathedrals, Renaissance and Baroque palaces and celebrated vistas. The new motorways skip most of them.

Along the ancient roads, officials on government missions found state-operated resting places and stables with fresh horses. According to ancient authors, most of the private inns (cauponae) on the highways had unsavory reputations, so affluent travelers broke up their journeys by staying at their own villas in towns such as Terracina or with friends along the way. Today these highways are lined not only with motels and fast-food places but also with many old and new inns and restaurants where one can have a leisurely meal or spend the night.

Network of Roman roads still used in Italy.

Other Roman Routes

EMAINS of Roman roads play a role in the transportation system throughout Italy. A network of motorways bears the brunt of the nation's long-distance traffic, but among the subsidiary national routes, which are toll-free, are the so-called consular roads, a lega-cy of the ancient Romans. In addition to the Appian Way (National Route No. 7), they

Via Aurelia (National Route No. 1) begins in Rome and passes through Pisa and Genoa to the Italian and French Rivieras. Its earliest section, to the Etruscan seaport of Cosa, (now Ansedonia) and north to Volterra, is believed to have been built in the third century B.C. Via Cassia (National Route No. 2) goes from Rome to Florence via Lake Bolsena and Siena, with an early variant by way of Arezzo. The road was built in the fifth century B.C. during the earliest period of Rome's relations with the Etruscan city states. It was probably named after L. Cassius Longinus, censor and proconsul between 119 and 117 B.C., who is credited with having the highway repaired and paved.

Via Flaminia (National Route No. 3) connects Rome and Rimini, passing through Spoleto, Foligno and Fano. Built by Caius Flaminius in 220 B.C., this was an important north-south artery in classical times and later became a major invasion route for the Goths and other barbarians.

Via Emilia (National Route No. 9) connects Rimini, Modena, Bologna and Piacenza. Named after its builder, Marcus Aemilius Lepidus, consul in 78 B.C., it was an extension of the Via Flaminia. Via Salaria (National Route No. 4) leads from Rome to Rieti, Ascoli Piceno and Porto d'Ascoli. It was named after the salt that was transported from the sea near Rome to the mountainous country of the Sabines.

Via Tiburtina (National Route No. 5) connects Rome, Tivoli, Avezzano and Pescara and was the ancient road to Tibur (now

Via Casilina (National Route No. 6) leads from Rome to Frosinone and Cassino, with extensions farther south. It was named after Casilinum, which, as Capua, became the chief town of the province of Campania.

Two years ago, when five French modern-dance companies visited the American Dance Festival and saw the Lubovitch troupe, a few of the French visitors remarked that they could never hope to equal these American dancers in technique; that is, they could not execute the movements with the same form, exactness, speed, stamina, and stage projection.

SWITZERLAND

UNITED STATE

The core issue here is one of training. Had the French dancers studied the modernfance techniques the Lubovitch dancers have learned, some of them could dance this way. In fact, however, no specific single technique is at the root of the Lubovitch dancers' abilities. One can see this kind of situation in the Paul Taylor Dance Company; there is no Taylor technique in the sense of one training system such as ballet's academic idiom or the Martha Graham and Merce Conningham techniques.

One of Taylor's most recent recruits, Douglas Wright, is from New Zealand, where certainly there is no Taylor technique as such. A former member of the Limbs Company, Wright is a well-trained, allround dancer who can serve Taylor's artistic purpose. Possessing a general grammar of movement, he can adapt to the Taylor style.

The Lubovitch company has drawn from even more disparate sources. Because I had Afirst seen Lubovitch as a dancer in a ballet company, the now-defunct Harkness Ballet. I assumed he was a ballet dancer first, with modern-dance training in his background.

But at the Toronto Dance Theater's performance at Brooklyn College recently, he said he considered himself a modern-dancer who had been a member of a ballet company. The point was pertinent to a discussion of how the Toronto dancers looked.

It has become very difficult, Lubovitch said, for a modern-dance choreographer to get dancers who do not look like ballet dancers. The Toronto company, with less sleek bodies and more physical variety than most American troupes, was more of the naditional modern-dance company, he felt. His company has sometimes confused the issue. When he started out with his troupe in the early 1970s, Lubovitch enlisted the services of Harkness dancers and brilliant, classically trained dancers such as Susan Magno, who had been one of the top principals in the Joffrey Ballet. The early Lubovitch choreography often, if not exclusively, juxtaposed definable ballet steps with movement clearly growing out of modern dance.

A change occurred in the mid-to-late 1970s when Lubovitch turned to minimalist composers such as Philip Glass and Steve Reich. With minimal and repetitive scores, he naturally turned toward a more reduced vocabulary. The ballet element did not disappear, but it was absorbed within Lubovitch's modern-dance shapes. One no longer sees a ballet step such as the pas de Basque clearly outlined in his works. Instead, one sees a rounded and de-emphasized version of the same step that is used as a throwaway line within a larger movement phrase -- and that phrase looks like modern dance.

This year's premiere by Lubovitch, "A Brahms Symphony." suggests he has climbed out of the minimalist rut in which so many choreographers have stayed put. The new work is above all an outlet for his dancers, who in turn make the choreography look exuberantly passionate.

Among the soloists here, Rob Besserer. huge and tall, dances with a powerful grace that always astonishes. No movement seems too small for his frame; there is no awkwardness in his fluidity, which always projects volume as well as line. Nancy Colahan remains indehibly associated with the Isadora Duncan and Denishawn revivals in which she appeared earlier in her career, and here Lubovitch may have found his ideal of a true modern dancer. The rounded shapes she creates so naturally with a magnanimous sweep recall Duncan's impassioned odes to joy, yet Colahan's contemporary approach is

If one can visualize Colahan leading the Marseillaise, Christine Wright — petit and overtly virtuosic — could be the piper in "The Spirit of "76." Often contrasted against Besserer's strength, she is one of those form-perfect dancers whose quality of movement is modulated within each phrase. Douglas Varone, once with the José Limon company. is more gnarled, more interesting than a dancer with a "perfect" body.

In the end, Lubovitch has rendered the choreography symphonic through the quality of the movement rather than through its patterns — and his dancers have allowed him to do so.

Buying a Weeklong Slice of Highlands Village Life

by Mary Farguharson

TILMELFORD, Scotland -Charles Stott, a businessman in his early 30s, and his wife dreamed of giving up city life for a home in the Highlands. In 1982 dream became reality. On the banks of a loch in the heart of Argyll they bought not just a house but an entire village, which they have converted into a time-sharing property. For £1,000 to £4,000, vacationers can becottages for a specified week every year. Under Scottish law, the cottages, which sleep four to eight persons, can be passed on as an inheritance in perpetuity; in England and Wales, time-share ownership expires after 80

The Stotts aim at retaining the old-fashioned charm of the cottages at Loch Melfort Estate. It differs from other local holiday villages in what it does not offer: There are no private jacuzzis, no squash courts, no dinner dances, no microwave ovens. The come the legal owners of one of the 14 furnishings are old pine. The village does offer yacht moorings and horses to ride, as well as an indoor swimming pool and sauna. The village has been bought and sold before. In the Middle Ages it belonged to the Campbells of Melfort, who produced six merals, four admirals and three members of Parliament in seven generations. When the last male Campbell died the village was sold, becoming a center for production of gunpowder. In 1878 a fatal explosion and contraction of demand ended this era and the village went into decline. Now the swimming pool is in the old powder house.

From Glasgow, Loch Melfort is a twoand-a-half-hour drive, up the shores of Loch Lomond and through a spectacular moun-tain pass to the point called "Rest and Be Thankful." The nearest British Rail station is at Oban, a 20-minute drive from Loch rowitz and Toscanini were expatriates; Menuhin and Siern were the children of immigrants. "American music was enriched by the ravages of Europe," Stern said. "The best of Russian and Polish violin playing, Ger-man brass playing, Italian singing — that all became the 'American style.' It was an amalgam, which in a very real way reflected the amalgam that was the United States."

As American-born artists came to hold their own on American stage, if not dominate them, the name of Carnegie Hall became associated with the musical metamorphosis. And the stature of the hall, the imprimatur it gave any concert within its walls, speeded that metamorphosis. The world premieres of American compoNed Rorem's "Symphony No. 3" in 1959 and Reich's "Octet" in 1980. Aaron Copland, Samuel Barber, Norman Dello Joio, Roy Harris saw their major works given debuts in Carnegie Hall. Perhaps the biggest event in this Americanization was Bernstein's appointment in 1957 as musical director of the Philharmonic. Young, handsome, witty, he was made to order for the burgeoning television age; in his Young People's Concerts, he made classical music seem fun, and nothing was more American than that. Even more to the point, Bernstein followed a series of European-born men whose musical taste harkened to their homelands. In Toscanini's decade with the Philharmonic, for instance, he conducted only five American sitions at Carnegie Hall include George Gershwin's "An American in Paris" in 1928, Bernstein's "Jeremiah" symphony in 1944, ing about Carnegie Hall in Israel when he was 7 or 8 years old. When Stern visited China in 1979, musicians there knew the name. Mail addressed only "Carnegie Hall, U.S.A." is delivered.

Today's Carnegie Hall audience is surely more egalitarian than its predecessors, and the leadership of the half is less affiliated with New York's old-money bluebloods than, say, the Philharmonic or the Metropolitan Opera. Essentially, one managing director, Seymonr L. Rosen, runs the artistic end, and another, Norton Belknap, runs the business, fund-raising and real-estate end. The donors to the hall range from Rockefellers and Astors to the rock musician Joe Jackson and the pop songwriter Neil Sedaka.

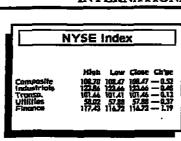

Names like Sedaka's and Jackson's are instructive, for the second factor in the Americanization of Carnegie Hall has been its wide-ranging booking policy. The hall's popular music programs helped dissolve the barrier between "high culture" and "pop culture." Carnegie Hall had begun present-ing popular music as early as 1912, with the Clef Club Orchestra of banjos, mandolins, clarinets and drums, conducted by the black orchestra leader James Reese Europe. W.C. Handy played Carnegie in 1928, Benny Goodman in 1938. In 1943 came the premiere of Duke Ellington's "Black, Brown and Beige," and a series of jazz concerts followed in the late 1940s and the 1950s.

The shift from nightclub to concert half could prove unnerving. "I didn't like the idea of playing there at all," Goodman recalled. "It was some press agent's idea. I fought it all the way. Carnegie Hall was where they played Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, I said, What are we going to do in there?"

The use of light — or, more properly, pulses of light and darkness — for communication is not new. American Indians sent up smoke signals, and in World War II the military sent Morse Code messages by flicking searchlights on and off from ships. More recently, infrared light, which is just outside the visible spectrum, has been used to send far more data much more

N one typical infrared system, sound waves first are converted into electricity by a microphone. The electricity enters a diode, a semiconductor chip inside a glass bead. The chip jemits infrared light when electrically agitated. The infrared bursts are picked up in a headset by a photocell that changes the bursts back to electricity. An amplifier converts the electricity distracting. Infrared, unlike ultraviolet, is not dangerous. Although commonly associated with heat, infrared light in communications is of very low power and therefore cool. A TV infrared output emits about one watt an hour in heat, only about 1 percent of what a person gives off.

For communication within a single room, infrared light has several advantages over radio. First, radio frequencies are crowded, and it is difficult and costly to get regulatory approval. Second, because infrared is light, it does not go through walls, so that interference is minimal. Third, the operation of electrical equipment such as that in factories, can interfere with radio, but not with infrared light.

Controlonics Corp. of Fitchburg, Massachusetts, is selling infrared systems to factories. John H. Turner Jr., the company's rengineering vice president, said that Controlonics and Intel Corp. were showing the system to automakers as a means for inspectors to transmit problems to a computer while a car still was on an assembly line, speeding rework. In offices, it soon may be used

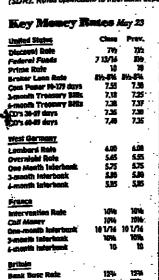

As with radio, portability and lack of wires are assets. Medical schools are using the system as a teaching tool. A doctor can hook a stethoscope to a portable infrared transmitter and 100 students, each with headphones, can hear the same patient's heartbeat. The doctor can roll the transmitter to different hospital rooms and repeat the process. Portable systems also are used in churches and

Bond Dealers Criticize New-Issue Mispricing

By Carl Gewirtz International Herald Tribune

HELSINKI — The current practice in the Eurobond market of pricing new issues at terms below levels designed to attract final investors was sharply criticized here Thursday at the Annual Conference of the Association of International Bond Dealers.

Leading market participants also attacked the inadequate supply of timely information concerning borrowers. They noted that new issues now are priced and trading in the market before detailed telexes or prospectuses have been sent to the banks invited to underwrite the of-

Hansjörg Rudloff, deputy chair-man of Credit Snisse First Boston, rejected criticism on the pricing of new issues, saying: "The only ones who can complain are those who do who can company are those who do them. If co-managers accept the terms, they do it of their own free choice, for whatever motivations."

CSFB, the largest originator of new issues, is often criticized for mispricing — as on the latest $1.8billion floating-rate note for the European Community — although Union Bank of Switzerland is regarded as the most blatant mispricer in the market.

David Watkins, vice president of Goldman Sachs International, said that mispricing will continue as long as co-managers do not rebel. However, he added that the current pattern of launching issues at terms that make no economic sense with co-managers expected to bridge the gap between the initial pricing and levels acceptable to in-vestors by either losing money or

Mr. Watkins also observed that standards regarding the division of underwriting costs, promulgated a week ago by the International Primary Market Association, should in the future put more of a financial burden on lead managers of mispriced issues. These managers will now be obliged to bear the bulk of the costs involved in stabilizing the new-issue price rather than passing that on to the entire group of un-

A primary motivation for banks to participate in badly priced offers is concern for their standing in the "league tables" listing the major underwriters. However, Peter Eng-ström, director of the Swedish National Debt Office, said that Sweden, one of the major users of the market, considers league tables "useless" and "not a tool we use" to select lead managers.

Both Mr. Engström and James Ammerunan, acting U.S. deputy as-sistant Treasury secretary, said they preferred to see the market shift to an auction basis, where borrowers publicly seek proposals and banks bid for paper. The Treasury will do this next week in marketing $1 billion of five-year notes, its third specially targeted issue for sale outside the United States.

Both said that the auction system allows the market to set the pricing rather than one bank which, for whatever reasons, may be offering nurealistically low terms.

Mr. Rudloff, however, objected, saying that this transferred "the judgment of the market" to the Turning to Euronote facilities, Mr. Engström warned that this developing market for short-dated securities could be killed before it matured, because of banks promising borrowers more than the banks

In this edition, we introduce listings for the currency options traded on the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, which has the world's heaviest trading in these products. This information will be offered daily. Today, these listings are on Page 14.

[Separately, United Press International reported Thursday that the Philadelphia Exchange said it plans to establish a link with the London Stock Exchange for trading currency options.

(The new link would allow members of both exchanges to open an options position in one market and close that position in another, the Philadelphia Exchange said, UPI reported. The agreement is expected to receive approval from the ruling bodies of both exchanges and begin operation Aug. 3Ll

The Split Personality of the U.S. Economy

Industrial Production Stays Flat While Other Sectors Shake Off Recession

By Nicholas D. Kristof

Manufacturing

Service

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The U.S. economy has developed a split personality - languid in manufacturing but dynamic in the services sector — that complicates efforts to stimulate production, economists say.

The two-tier economy is very clear-cut," said Walter K. Joelson, chief economist of General Electric Co. "We're in recovery, yet industrial production is as flat as an ironing board. So you have to ask yourself what the dickens is going on. If industrial production is not expanding in a recovery, it sure isn't going to expand in a recession."

Figures announced May 15, for example, showed that output from the nation's factories and mines was lower in April than in July of last year. Yet overall, the economy grew at an annual rate of about 21/2 percent during that same period.

"The industrial sector has been flat which is a recession for them, but the 75 percent of gross national product outside the industrial sector has been doing pretty well," said Michael W. Keran, chief economist of Prudential Insurance Co. of Ameri-ca. "Employment is up 2.5 million in the non-industrial. sector, while employment has been flat in the industrial sector since last July." Gross national product is a measure of the total value of a nation's goods

Alarmed by the weakness in the industrial sector, the Federal Reserve cut its lending rate last Friday by 1/2-point, to 71/2 percent. But such a stimulus can cause problems in a two-tier economy: The healthy sectors get as much of a boost as the sickly sectors. Some analysis fear that that could lead to inflationary pressures in the parts of the economy that are doing fine.

"The major beneficiary is usually real estate," said David D. Hale, chief economist of Kemper Financial Services in Chicago. "The classic symptom of that now is the office boom in the U.S., which may turn into a residential housing boom later this

He said that the economic pattern of the United States in the first half of 1985 is similar to what has happened in some Third World countries. "Chile and Argentina are the best examples," Mr. Hale said. "There was heavy external borrowing and an overvalued exchange rate that crowded out tradeable goods and manufacturing." In the United States, lower interest rates certainly would belp alling sectors like agri-culture, mining and manufacturing by re-ducing borrowing costs, but also would be a powerful stimulus for the already humming construction industry. As mortgage rates dropped, more and more people would buy homes or build new ones.

But if the Fed did not succeed in bolstering the ailing industrial sector, could the torpor in agriculture and manufacturing drag the entire economy into recession? Most economists doubt it, and say the economy is likely to pick up its pace later in the year. But some financial analysts are more pessimistic. They argue that a thriving economy requires a stable industrial sector, a theme sounded by the Federal Reserve's chairman, Paul A. Volcker, among others. In fact, an ailing manufacturing sector can exert a considerable drag on the overall economy. One indication of that came Tuesday when the government said the economy grew at a slow annual rate of 0.7 percent during the first three months of Economists, who generally had expected GNP to grow at a respectable annual rate of about 4 percent in the first quarter, were stunned when the growth was estimated last month at only 1.3 percent. However, many had expected the revised figures to be low.

Despite the sobering first-quarter figures, most economists still doubt that a recession is imminent because the slowdown has primarily been induced by a flood of imports.

The strength of the dollar against other currencies has meant that U.S. goods are expensive compared with products made abroad. That hurts not only U.S. exports, but also all American products that compete with imports inside the United States.

The result has been a record U.S. trade deficit and something close to recession in the "tradeable goods" sector, which produces items that are exported or that compete with imports. Final sales of goods and services in the United States, for example, grew at a rate of 3.5 percent in the first quarter. But most of that rise in consumption went to buy imports.

Swelling imports have siphoned off growth before, but they have never produced a recession. And economists say it would take a sustained surge in imports to (Continued on Page 13, Col. 2)

The Associated Press LOS ANGELES - T. Boone Pickens said that he hoped to make a profit of $100 million to $200 million from his threemonth takeover fight against Unocal Corp., which he aban-doned earlier this week.

Mr. Pickens, chairman Mesa Petroleum Co. of Amarillo, Texas, and head of the investor group that bid for Unocal, said that his prediction was based on the assumption that Unocal would take significant steps to enhance its stock price. Unocal stock closed Thursday at $35,125 a share on the New York Stock Exchange, up 25 cents from Tuesday and down

$10.875 from Monday. Unocal and Mr. Pickens Monday reached a complex agreement that called for him to drop his takeover bid in ex-change for Unocal buying back part of his stock with securities valued at $72 a share, an offer also open to other stockholders. Mr. Pickens retained 16 milion shares, or about two-thirds of his Unocal stock, but strict rules were placed on its use or

CBS Considers Stock Repurchase Or a Merger to Try to Block Turner

WASHINGTON - CBS Inc., faced with a hostile takeover bidfrom Turner Broadcasting System, said it planned to consider financial transactions including a possible merger with a third party or the repurchase of its own stock.

The disclosure, made in filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission, was the first time that CBS had raised the possibility of a merger and indicated that the company believed that it might need to take major steps to increase its stock price to defeat the bid by Turner Broadcasting, which is controlled by Ted Turner. Analysis value Turner's bid at about $150 a CBS share, or a total of $3 billion. CBS stock closed Thursday at $110.50, up 62.5 cents, on the New York Stock

"This is to provide us with flexibility should these steps become desirable," a CBS spokeswoman said Wednesday. CBS said the options it will explore also include the sale or purchase by the company of "assets or businesses," changes in the company's capital structure and the issuance of new securities.

Any move by CBS that either significantly increases its debt or its stock price would likely defeat Mr. Turner's current bid. For example, if CBS increased its stock price by repurchasing shares at a substantial premium above the market price, Mr. Turner's bid no longer would be as attractive to stockholders because there would be little difference between the value of his offer and the price of CBS stock.

Mr. Turner's bid, which includes no cash, offers CBS stockholders a complex package including risky, unsecured securities called "junk" bonds, in exchange for their stock, and includes a plan to help finance the removed talk target by selling all CBS's considered. the proposed takeover by selling all CBS's non-television broadcast-ing businesses. Mr. Turner is waiting for government approval before taking his proposal to CBS stockholders.

LONDON — Dalgety PLC and Gill & Duffus PLC said Thursday they had agreed to merger terms on the basis of a bid from Dalgety valuing Gill's ordinary share capital at £125.7 million ($159 million). A joint statement said terms are two Dalgety ordinary shares and 25 pence cash for every five Gill & Duffus ordinary shares. An offer will also be made for Gill preference shares. Dalgety does not hold any Gill & Duffus shares at present.

TWA Asks Congress to Block Icahn

WASHINGTON - The chairman of Trans World Airlines Inc. asked Congress Thursday to act to temporarily halt Carl C. Icahn's hostile takeover of TWA, saying that it would lead to the airline's

Five years ago, the only foreign representation was the London office, which confined itself to trade financing.

After global-thinking, Dutch-born Mr. Abrahamsen took the helm in 1975, Nedbank expanded aggressively abroad, opening branches in New York and Hong Kong.

The range of activities of foreign branches was broadened dramatically. Today they engage in virtually every type of international banking transaction, apart from retail deposit rais-

"It was a very deliberate stategic move," says Mr. Abrahamsen, "part of our policy of balanced growth." Nedbank's decisive move offshore has given it an edge on its South African rivals. The other major banks in South Africa are either controlled from abroad and cannot expand internationally without competing with their parents, or have been exclusively home based.

Nedbank's foreign drive has made it by far the biggest raiser of off-shore finance for South African borrowers. It has also enabled Nedbank to increase its share of the foreign exchange market significantly.

Even though the Rand has depreciated steeply against other currencies, causing substantial losses to some South African borrowers, Nedbank's international activities have been lucrative: It has been immune to Dollar strength as it takes deposits in the same currency as it lends. Other South African domiciled banks are now following Nedbank's lead and setting up offshore branches.

Even though its asset base is considerably smaller than those of its bigger rivals, it has long enjoyed the highest market capitalisation of any banking group on the Johannesburg Stock Exchange. For several years, its returns on shareholders' funds have been among the highest in the world.

"If we have a by-word, it is quality, not quantity," says Mr. Abrahamsen, "we are not interested in being the biggest."

For decades the emphasis among South African banks has been to woo ostensibly cheap retail deposits from the public. As a result, they have had to operate extensive branch networks in a far-flung, relatively thinly populated country. These networks have become increasingly expensive and unwieldly.

J. Marie Control The Trib's new guide for business travel brims with valuable information

There's never been a guide quite like it. Thirteen European business cities, analysed in detail according to a business traveler's wants and needs. It's the key to turning that ordinary business trip into a more pleasant, more efficient journey.

Seven subdivisions under each city include: 1. Basic city overview with vital information. 2. Hotels, with emphasis on business services. 3. Restaurants, for on and off-duty pleasure. 4. After hours suggestions. 5. Diversions, from grand opera to jogging. 6. Shopping.

7. Weekending ideas. Trib business readers all across Europe shared their most treasured travel secrets with journalist Peter Graham. The result: a book for business travelers with contributions from business travelers. Over 200 pages, this hardcover edition is available directly from the Trib.

A great gift idea for colleagues, business contacts, or yourself. Order today.

REX MORGAN WONDER WHY MR. TOMKINS WANTS TO TALK TO ME?

Strategic Command and Control

BOOKS

By Daniel Ford, 272 pp. $18.95. Simon & Schuster, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N. Y. 10020.

Reviewed by Art Seidenbaum BETWEEN the peril of our time and a D potential panic to end all time is a mem-brane of mutual intelligence — fragile, cover-ing thousands of implanted amnifolation enes as well as arms control discussions.

Daniel Ford, reasonable and rightly con-cerned, takes us through the labyrinth of U.S. military communications, the control and command procedures on the West's side —the command procedures on the west s side — the warning devices, the spy satellites, the detection systems — attached to the monstrous prospect of nuclear warfare. The professionals call the vital linkage of the U.S. Worldwide Military Command and Control System by the ugly name of "connectivity."

Ford destroys several everyday illusions

along the way, those comforting assumptions that allow us normal nighttime sleep. There is no single "button," for instance. Yes, an aide carries the "football" wherever the president goes, but there are other balls and buttons in constant play. The logic is obvious if you allow yourself to think about it — and many of us prefer not to — because the United States cannot rely upon one man, one button, in a world where anything from a traffic accident to a terrorist could destroy a singular connective. "The president's most frustrating problem in preparing to command U.S. forces du nuclear war," Ford writes, "is that he may be among the first to die." The word "decapitation," meaning the cutting off of the heads of states and the devices of decision, appears frequently.

The weaponry may be as deadly as adver-tised, but the so-called counterforce of ballistic missiles depends upon such vulnerable and unsophisticated communications relays as mere telephone wires. The United States's magnificent electronic abilities to intercept Soviet transmissions are balanced by inadequate capacities to coordinate the command of its own forces.

"The Button" is extremely disturbing, whatever your perspective. If you share the adn tration's views about windows of vulnerability, then Ford presents evidence of U.S. inability to respond even if the questionable communi cations system were in working order: "Every piece of modern electronic circuitry — from digital watches to computers to the entire na-tional electric power grid and telecommunica-

Solution to Previous Puzzle

THE BUTTON: The Pentagon's tions system - might suddenly stop working as soon as a few large Soviet weapons were detonated somewhere high above the continental United States." A phenomenon called "electromagnetic pulse" is the problem, its effects are arguable.

"The Button" is extremely disturbing if you believe that the United States has already bought all the widgets and weaponry that a sane society might need to deter attack. Ford cites a Pentagon study of U. S. command and control retaliatory capability, and reports that the present system could be effectively disabled by fewer than 50 Soviet weapons and would survive, at best, for only six to 12 hours after a Soviet attack."

after a Soviet attack."

And "The Button" is most disturbing if you think the U. S. posture is wholly defensive.

Openly, lucidly, hornifically, Ford explores the reasons for a nuclear power to launch a first strike rather than react to an opponent's attack. Desperation might do it. In several chapters and by several examples, he shows how retaliation might not work. In dozens of places, he characterizes the Pentagon mentality as unwilling to wait for the other side to attack. "Down through the ages, commanders have always favored offense to defense, seizing the initiative rather than ceding it to the entagy. initiative rather than ceding it to the ent. by.

Permitting the United States to be destroyed by the Soviets, and then retaliating, is a completely immilitary notion."

And, in more paragraphs than this reader wants to remember, he cites civilian theorists agreeing that a first-strike possibility has to be part of SIOP, the U. S. Single Integrated Operational Plan, the innocent-sounding title for the state of a selections. what to do in case of nuclear war. John Stein-bruner, director of Foreign Policy Studies at the Brookings Institution, told Ford: "We have never as a matter of national policy accepted the notion of pre-emption. We have always as a matter of military realism planned to be able to do it."

The Russians, writes Ford, will not be surprised; their war plans are a "mirror image"; of the United States. Neither side may want to taunch what has been called mutually assured destruction, but neither side wants to absorb ngular destruction either.

Ford proposes no programs to cure the giobal malady, to strengthen the membrane of mutual intelligence. His book suggests that both sides are better at blowing up the other side than defending themselves, each suffering imbalances of power as well as fear. Arms control leading to disarmament is the most obvious, most hopeful — perhaps the only remaining — intelligent step toward mutually restant curvival assured survival.

Victor Hugo, 'Immortal Master,' Is Commemorated in Beijing ...

The Associated Press BELIING - Victor Hugo, the centenary of whose death falls this year, was honored as an "immortal master of literature and the arts" at a meeting here sponsored by the Chinese Writers' Association and academic organizations.

The meeting Wednesday was attended by 500 Chinese writers, scholars and artists, the Xinhua news agency said. ### McEnroe, Connors Quit U.S. Davis Cup Team

DUESSELDORF -- Upset over a sponsor's demand that they sign a code of conduct, John McEnroe and Jimmy Connors announced Wednesday their withdrawal from the U.S. Davis Cup team.

Speaking after completing their first matches in the World Team Tennis Cup, McEnroe said he would not play Davis Cup tennis this year and Connors said he was quitting the team for good. Without McEnroe, the world's McEnroe said the demanded code of conduct "wasn't necessary" while Connors said "the code played a part but it was also for personal reasons. I still enjoy playing but I am fed up with a lot of other acts around the game." McEnroe and Connors were.

SPORTS Celtics Steal Victory, Will Play Lakers in NBA Final

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches BOSTON - Andrew Toney heard the call from his bench: "Timeout." Larry Bird said that may have distracted the Philadelphia player just long enough to give the 76ers a timeout until next season. Bird stole the ball from Toney with four seconds left to clinch Boston's 102-100 victory Wednesday night that sent the defending champion Celtics into the title round of the National Basketball Association playoffs.

There, starting Monday afternoon, the Celtics will meet the Los Angeles Lakers, who wrapped up the Western Conference title with a 153-109 victory over the Denver

Nuggets on Wednesday night. Earvin (Magic) Johnson had 19 assists in the game in Inglewood, California, to become the all-time playoff leader in that category.

By winning the lifth game of the best-of-seven Eastern Conference final to take the series, 4-1, the Celtics kept alive their hopes of becoming the first team to win consecutive NBA championships since Boston did it in 1969.

"If I was the coach, I would have called timeout in that situation, too," Bird said of the game-ending play in the 76ers' left corner, right next to their bench. But only a player on the court can get a timeout, and the officials did not

Bird said Toney "lost his concentration" when he heard the call from the beach. "He sort of looked around for what he was going to do and as he brought the ball up, I just got my hand in."
Bird then finng the ball across the court to teammate Danny Ainge and time ran out. "I had the ball on the baseline by the bench," said Toney. "I knew we had just a few seconds left. I was trying to go one-on-one. I heard somebody on the bench call ti-meout and I just held up and he (Bird) rushed over.

That enabled the Lakers to break away from a tie at 34 and build a 57-37 lead in the next seven minutes. At halftime, it was 76-53 and Denver never again got close as the Lakers rung up the second-highest total in NBA playoff history. The Lakers' appearance in the league final will be their sixth in the past seven years, but last year's championship series ended on a sour note when they lost to the Celtics in seven games.

Denver's coach, Doug Moe, said

the Lakers "were the best team last year, but they gave it away, so I don't know what will happen this

"L.A. is better this year than last, no comparison. They are stronger physically, they're a better rebounding team, they play a stronger game, and the big plus is Byron Scott," Moe said. "He's a pure shooter and he lifts the whole level of their players."

The stingy Celtics allowed the 76ers just 100 points per game in their series, with the 76ers exceeding that total only once. In compil-ing an 11-2 playoff mark this year, Los Angeles has averaged 131.2 points per game.

"They're playing the best basketball of any team in the league," Bird said of the fast-breaking Lakers. "But we're a defensive-minded

INDIANAPOLIS - For each of the six rookies who will start in Sunday's Indianapolis 500, another who tried to qualify will watch and wonder what might have been. The first-time starters will include Arie Luyendyk of the Netherlands in row seven, Jim Crawford of Scotland in row nine, Rich Vogler in row 11 and the entire eighth row:

Ed Pimm, Rani Boesel and John Paul Jr. The odd rookies out were Michael Roe of England, Jacques Villenueve of Canada, Mike Nish, Randy Lanier, Phil Krueger and Willy T. Ribbs, who had hoped to be the first black driver in the field.

Boesel, a Brazilian, was the fastest rookie qualifier, making the 33-car field at 206.498 miles per hour (332.320 kilometers per hour). He had never been on an oval track until arriving at the Speedway a month ago. Boesel was the third driver on the team of

Georgia Basketball Team Penalized

ATLANTA (AP) --- The NCAA has barred the University of Georgia's basketball coaches from off-campus recruiting for one year and revoked the eligibility of star forward-center Cedric Henderson, although the school said it believed Henderson's eligibility will be restored. Wednesday night's penalties were part of a one-year probation imposed on the program after the NCAA investigated its recruiting prac-tices and said it found nine violations of rules in 1982, 1983 and 1984. The NCAA said it also ordered Georgia to return 90 percent, or $254,880, of its profits from participation in the NCAA tournament this winter. Additional penalties were imposed directly on the baskethall noctor, and Willord Science, offensive See- coach, Hugh Durham, and an unidentified assistant coach.

LINCOLNSHIRE, Illinois (AP) - National Football League owners voted Wednesday to reduce team rosters to 45 players for the 1985 season, down from the 49-man squads the league had maintained since the strike-marred 1982 season.

In Washington, Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association, called the decision "something which will hurt the quality of the game" and said he wondered "if the owners are sending a signal to the union that collective bargaining is going to be tough" when negotiations begin on a contract to replace the one expiring after the 1986 season.

BATON ROUGE, Louisiana (AP) - After more than two hours of debate and intense lobbying by Governor Edwin Edwards, the Louisiana Senate approved by one vote Wednesday a resolution endorsing a lease that would keep the New Orleans Saints in the Superdome for 21 years. The approval, passing on a vote of 21-17, one more than the required simple majority of the 39-member Senate, frees the governor to sign the lease agreement, with $2.8 million in inducements, asked by auto dealer Tom Benson as a condition for his purchase of the Saints from Houston entrepreneur John Mecom Jr.

By Russell Baker ASHINGTON - Since dew scribing the miseries afflicting me since I stopped smoking 361 days ago (IHT, April 19), I have been inundated with expert opinion. Almost all the experts agree that the constant strangling sensa-tion I suffer in neck and waist is not the result of a mysterious shrinkage of clothing, as I suppose, but is caused by food-fueled expansion of the fatty tissues. This strikes me as bunk. Is it sensible to suppose that a stomach might crave more food intake simply because a set of lungs with which it happened to be associated suddenly had its smoke cut off?

It's my guess that the average stomach doesn't care one way or the other about the lungs' smoke supply, but even if it did, would it go on a food binge because the smoke stopped?

Stomach and lungs, after all, are close neighbors; living next door to lungs that are constantly full of smoke must affect a stomach the way living across the street from a burning dump would affect you

To be sure, after conquering the habit, I increased food consumption slight-ly for health reasons: Having been unnaturally thin all my life, I was afraid of suffering a dangerous weight loss once I stopped taking in the four or five pounds of smoke that I had been carrying around for years.

To guard against this, I added a bowl of oatmeal topped with sliced banana to my normal breakfast, began eating dessert at lunch (usually a not terribly big slice of mince pie), and, just before bedtime, consuming a bowl of ice cream and, once in a while, a toasted muffin with butter and blackberry jam, followed on very rare occasions by a couple of pieces of cold fried chicken.

One morning after having to call my two grown sons to help me get my belt buckled, I acceded to their argument that the diet experts might know what they were talking about and decided to test them.

Frankly, I did not undertake this popular American discipline in good spirit, but with feelings of profound malice toward all those antismoking health zealots who had assured me that giving up the butts would make me feel like a million dollars.

BUFFALO, New York — With razor blades and Scotch tape, 88 black and white keys and a new computer, Rudy Martin makes music — music that tickles the ivories and sets toes wagging and fingers snap-

In his cluttered balcony workshop, Martin's long fingers stroked the keys, while between each chord his right foot pumped a long steel rod that made an ancient contraption of air tubes and levers and spinning wheels spit out a stream of paper spat-tered with punctures.
